Abstract

Traditional Chinese medicine (TCM) is generated originally from Chinese philosophy. In the face of the 21st century era of knowledge globalization, world-wide economic markets and international cooperation, how to develop TCM? Are there new trends in TCM? Based on the developing situation of TCM in 21st Century, there are four possible new trends we can put forward as follows:

1. Knowledge of Chinese Traditional Medicine will become more wide-spread and accepted throughout the world as doctors expand the wealth of knowledge on human health.
2. The preservation of health using TCM will become a modern standard in the world.
3. The Combination of TCM and Western Medicine will create a better, new direction of medical development in the future.
4. Modernization and industrialization will be the developmental trend of Chinese herbal medicine.
